Sunny skies to draw out the crowds

BY SILVIA POWNALL

HUGE crowds are expected at the Dun Laoghaire Regatta later today and music fans are soaking up the sun at the Longitude Festival in Dublin.

The country basked in glorious sunshine yesterday with forecasters predicting another belter today.

The mercury climbed to 21 degrees in some parts of the country and it's expected to top 22 degrees in the south east this afternoon.

A Met Eireann spokesperson said: "There will be a few outbreaks of rain early on but it looks set to remain dry with spells.

Sun worshippers are advised to make the most of the weather as rain is expected overnight.
